Public health is an interdisciplinary field and to be a leader in the area of public health, an International Journal of Public Health (IJPH) should be a vital tool for professionals working in this field. However, it is doubtful whether there is a need for such an academic journal. Therefore, we assessed the publication trends and peer-reviewed articles published by members of the IJPH between January 1918 and December 2016. Moreover, the impact of the IJPH during the period between 1996 and 2016 was assessed, based on the number of citations, and trends in five major citation databases: Web of Science, Scopus, PubMed, Google Scholar and the Global Health Library. The IJPH has been published since its inception in 1918, with a publication growth rate of 1.4% per year. The total number of publications has increased over the past 100 years, and no trends in publication trends were observed. IJPH is strongly dependent on the number of editorial board members, and a number of active members (at least ten) is recommended to encourage the introduction of new ideas and ideas into the IJPH.This brief one-page summary highlights the main findings of the report.
