My very first photo was of what I called the \"Munsford swampball\". It was taken on October 9, 1980. I was using a Minolta Autocord (flash) with a Rolleiflex II (twin flash) through a Leitz Wetzlar 102mf 6x6 bellows. I borrowed the camera from the army and started exploring with the tripod and twin flash mounted on a bald eagle bean can I found on the side of the road on a trip to Savannah. I left the camera alone with that portrait for over a year before I tried to retouch it in Photoshop. I was using the CS1 version and can't remember exactly what version it was. While I took a brief, leap of faith by going with Lightroom 6 after five years working with Lightroom 5. I figured that I needed to see if it was a true advancement or just a half-hearted attempt to say that the 5 version was better than 4. Well, after 30 minutes of working with it, I decided that Lightroom 6 moves me comfortside of the camera. I like its flexibility, ease of use, and overall ability to intersperse my work seamlessly with the rest of the Photoshop workflow. The user interface can be improved upon, but compared to 4.0.5, which I used extensively for years, the improvements are small and easy. We can say the UI is still partly responsive, but a lot of the time it's not responsive and just doesn't move at all. I don't believe any of the quality settings (resolution, sharpness, etc) have been modified. I found that there were a lot of places where the UI was unresponsive, or where the UI being unresponsive was just distracting. In the old version of Photoshop, the UI would sometimes freeze in place as though it didn't know what to do; the UI now responds more like a child trying to mimic the real world. It still tries to be helpful, but, at the same time, it's willing to do the minimum. Not to be harsh, but it is kind of irritating to death. The app will at times slow down until you get off the keyboard .

When we unbox a new computer, we quickly learn if it's a PC or a Mac, which manufacturers we like (Apple, Lenovo & HP, or Samsung) and which we dislike — most of which is very public. But, it's when we unbox a brand-new PC for the first time that things tend to get interesting. The old games for Windows and Mac that we used to play are now gone. There's no more original battery. We're substituting new peripherals to make life easier. — Is your new laptop keyboard comfortable? Do you like the colors and branding? Everything seems new.
